Anatomy of a Fake News Scandal

Carmen Katz's Facebook post likely set Pizzagate in motion. "Someone or some group possibly took this unwitting woman and made her the source that they need," says Watts. Illustration by Sean McCabe

This story was reported in partnership with The Investigative Fund and Reveal from the Center for Investigative Reporting. Additional reporting: Aaron Sankin, Laura Starecheski, Michael Corey, Jaime Longoria and Jasper Craven.

The revelations overcame Edgar Maddison Welch like a hallucinatory fever. On December 1st, 2016, the father of two from Salisbury, North Carolina, a man whose pastimes included playing Pictionary with his family, tried to persuade two friends to join a rescue mission. Alex Jones, the Info-Wars host, was reporting that Hillary Clinton was sexually abusing children in satanic rituals a few hundred miles north, in the basement of a Washington, D.C., pizza restaurant. Welch told his friends the "raid" on a "pedo ring" might require them to "sacrifice the lives of a few for the lives of many." A friend texted, "Sounds like we r freeing some oppressed pizza from the hands of an evil pizza joint." Welch was undeterred. Three days later, armed with an AR-15 semiautomatic rifle, a .38 handgun and a folding knife, he strolled into the restaurant and headed toward the back, where children were playing ping-pong. As waitstaff went table to table, whispering to customers to get out, Welch maneuvered into the restaurant's kitchen. He shot open a lock and found cooking supplies. He whipped open another door and found an employee bringing in fresh pizza dough. Welch did not find any captive children – Comet Ping Pong does not even have a basement – but he did prove, if there were any lingering doubts after the election, that fake news has real consequences.

Welch's arrest was the culmination of an election cycle dominated by fake news – and by attacks on the legitimate press. Several media outlets quickly traced the contours of what became known as Pizzagate: The claim that Hillary Clinton was a pedophile started in a Facebook post, spread to Twitter and then went viral with the help of far-right platforms like Breitbart and Info-Wars. But it was unclear whether Pizzagate was mass hysteria or the work of politicians with real resources and agendas. It took the better part of a year (and two teams of researchers) to sift through the digital trail. We found ordinary people, online activists, bots, foreign agents and domestic political operatives. Many of them were associates of the Trump campaign. Others had ties with Russia. Working together – though often unwittingly – they flourished in a new "post-truth" information ecosystem, a space where false claims are defended as absolute facts. What's different about Pizzagate, says Samuel Woolley, a leading expert in computational propaganda, is it was "retweeted and picked up by some of the most powerful faces of American politics."

The original Pizzagate Facebook post appeared on the evening of October 29th, 2016, a day after then-FBI Director James Comey announced that the bureau would be reopening its investigation into Clinton's use of a private e-mail server while secretary of state. Data from the server had been found on electronics belonging to former Rep. Anthony Weiner (the husband of Clinton's close aide Huma Abedin), who had been caught texting lewd messages to a 15-year-old. On Facebook, a user named Carmen Katz wrote, "My NYPD source said its much more vile and serious than classified material on Weiner's device. The email DETAIL the trips made by Weiner, Bill and Hillary on their pedophile billionaire friend's plane, the Lolita Express. Yup, Hillary has a well documented predilection for underage girls. . . . We're talking an international child enslavement and sex ring."

Katz's Facebook profile listed her residence as Joplin, Missouri. With a link to a story headlined "Breaking: Hillary Clinton strategy memo leaked: 'Steal yard signs,'" Katz posted, "You know how we handle yard sign theft or tampering in South Missouri? With a 3 prong garden hoe buried in the middle of the back." We found no record of anyone with the name Carmen Katz in the entire state. But searching through her online activity, we noticed another clue: Every time she posted petitions on Change.org, such as "Put Donald Trump's Face on Mount Rushmore," the last signer was invariably Cynthia Campbell of Joplin. Campbell used the same profile picture as "Carmen Katz" on Facebook – that is, the same snapshot of the same cat.

For more than 20 years, a 60-year-old attorney named Cynthia Campbell has practiced law out of her bungalow-style home in Joplin. In April, I began trying to contact her, asking if she was behind the initial Pizzagate post. Within days, the Carmen Katz Facebook account disappeared. I went to Campbell's house to try in person. A large NRA sticker adorned the screen door; on the porch was feline statuary and gardening equipment, including a three-pronged hoe. She didn't answer but later texted and called me. Campbell said yes, she set up the Facebook account, but it was hacked two or three years ago. She never explicitly denied posting the comment that started Pizzagate. Instead, she told me to disregard the NRA sticker – she just "supports hunting." She also claimed to be a rare Democrat in southwest Missouri. "You don't say much," she said. "You don't stick signs out."

Social-media accounts are routinely- hacked, but the next morning, when Campbell texted me 21 times, she sounded every bit like the user behind the original Carmen Katz post. "Stalking and harassing innocent people who have done nothing to you is wrong, evil and illegal," she wrote. "You should be helping people get their lives and health back going through such nightmares, not piling on, harassing them, making them feel unsafe and preyed upon." She threatened to report me to both the ACLU and Best Buy's Geek Squad.

"[P]eople like you don't give a shit that you destroy innocent humans' lives," she said. "Go back to your soul-sucking job. . . . You are fake news!"

It strains the imagination to think how Campbell – a cat lady in Missouri – had pieced together not only the story that Clinton was a sex-trafficking pedophile, but its details: NYPD officials, Weiner's laptop, Jeffrey Epstein's private jet. According to Clint Watts, a cyber and homeland-security expert at the Foreign Policy Research Institute, Katz fits neatly into a well-worn blueprint for disinformation campaigns. For a story to gain traction, propagandists plant false information on anonymous chat boards, hoping real people will pick it up and add a "human touch" to acts of digital manipulation. "If you want to sow a conspiracy, you seed it somewhere –

On a pair of anonymous message boards, we found several possible seeds of Pizzagate. On July 2nd, 2016, someone calling himself FBIAnon, who claimed to be a "high-level analyst and strategist" for the bureau, hosted an Ask Me Anything forum on 4chan. He claimed to be leaking government secrets – à la Edward Snowden – out of a love for country, but it wasn't always clear which country he meant. At various times, he wrote, "Russia is more a paragon of freedom and nationalism than any other country" and "We are the aggressors against Russia." FBIAnon's secrets were about the Department of Justice's inquiry into the Clinton Foundation, which federal prosecutors never formalized. "Dig deep," he wrote. "Bill and Hillary love foreign donors so much. They get paid in children as well as money."

"Does Hillary have sex with kidnapped girls?" a 4chaner asked.

"Yes," FBIAnon answered.

Another possible germ of Pizzagate appeared online about 10 hours before Katz posted her story on Facebook. TheeRANT describes itself as a message board for "New York City cops speaking their minds." Virtually everyone on the site uses an identity-masking screen name. Favorite topics include police body cameras (bad) and George Soros (worse). On October 29th, 2016, someone calling himself "Fatoldman" posted that he had a "hot rumor" about the FBI investigation.

Rolling Stone Anatomy of a Fake News Scandal

"[T]he feds were forced to reopen the hillary email case [because] apparently the NYPD sex crimes unit was involved in the weiner case," Fatoldman wrote. "On his laptop they saw emails. [T]hey notified the FBI. Feds were afraid that NYPD would go public so they had to reopen or be accused of a coverup."

Someone posted the news to a law enforcement Facebook group. From there, a user called Eagle Wings (@NIVIsa4031) posted it to Twitter. Eagle Wings' profile picture shows a smiling middle-aged woman above the description "USAF Vet believes Freedom Soars." Among her more influential followers are former deputy assistant to President Trump Sebastian Gorka and former national security adviser Gen. Michael Flynn, who actually shared a separate Eagle- Wings tweet last year. Eagle Wings' enthusiastic following likely has something to do with membership in "Trump's WarRoom," a private group of online activists who share and amplify political messages. Participants told Politico's Shawn Musgrave that hundreds, perhaps even thousands, of pro-Trump rooms coalesced during the campaign. "The members aren't stereotypical trolls," Musgrave tells me. "Most are baby boomers." A lot are women from the Midwest.

But Eagle Wings is not a typical political enthusiast, says Woolley, who directs research at the Institute for the Future's Digital Intelligence Lab. She tweets too often (more than 50,000 times since November 2015) to too many followers (120,000 as of November 2017). "Without a shadow of a doubt," he says, "Eagle Wings is a highly automated account [and] part of a bot network" – a centrally controlled group of social-media accounts. To explain how they work, Ben Nimmo, a fellow at the Atlantic Council's Digital Forensic Research Lab, uses a shepherding analogy. "A message that someone or some organization wants to 'trend' is typically sent out by 'shepherd' accounts," he says, which often have large followings and are controlled by humans. The shepherds' messages are amplified by 'sheepdog' accounts, which are also run by humans but can be default-set "to boost the signal and harass critics." At times, the shepherds personally steer conversations, but they also deploy automation, using a kind of Twitter cruise control to retweet particular keywords and hashtags. Together, Nimmo says, the shepherds and sheepdogs guide a herd of bots, which "mindlessly repost content in the digital equivalent of sheep rushing in the same direction and bleating loudly."

Whether Katz repeated something a herd of bots was bleating, or repackaged tidbits found on other parts of the Internet, her Facebook post was the "human touch" that helped the fake news story go viral. The "tell," says Watts, was what happened next. Most of us post into Internet oblivion. But about 12 hours after Katz shared her story, a Twitter user named @DavidGoldbergNY tweeted a screenshot of her post, twice – adding, "I have been hearing the same thing from my NYPD buddies too. Next couple days will be -interesting!"

On Twitter, @DavidGoldbergNY described himself as a "Jew, Lawyer & New Yorker." The account went live around the time of the Republican National Convention, in July 2016, posting divisive tweets like "Attacking the 1 percent is attacking 43 percent of the Jewish community." The account's profile picture – a man with a nose Photoshopped to look very large and hooked – has been used online for more than a decade. Based on the limited threads that have been archived, Woolley says, @DavidGoldbergNY appears to have been, like Eagle Wings, "highly automated" and part of "an organized effort" – possibly a bot network – to spread disinformation. One of @DavidGoldbergNY's tweets about the Katz Facebook post was retweeted 6,369 times.

RollingStone

Anatomy of a Fake News Scandal

What's nearly impossible to tell is who ran @DavidGoldbergNY. The handle is not among the 2,752 Twitter accounts linked to the Internet Research Agency, a disinformation shop run by the Kremlin, which the House Intelligence Committee released in November. And Twitter has yet to make public the handles of an additional 36,746 bot accounts its attorney Sean Edgett told Congress have "characteristics we used to associate an account with Russia." In any case, Russia is not the only one playing this game. "We've also had sources tell us that using bot networks has become a common practice among U.S. political campaigns," says Woolley, a practice that is difficult to trace. "They do it with subcontractors," he explains. "And the Federal Election Commission doesn't require reporting for subcontractors." One thing that does stand out, he adds, is "the more sophisticated bot nets, the ones that are successful at spreading stories, are built by people with a lot of resources. In our experience, across multiple different countries, the people that have deep pockets are the powerful political actors."

According to a sample of tweets with Pizzagate or related hashtags provided by Filippo Menczer, a professor of informatics at Indiana University, Pizzagate was shared roughly 1.4 million times by more than a quarter of a million accounts in its first five weeks of life – from @DavidGoldbergNY's tweet to the day Welch showed up at Comet Ping Pong. The vast majority of tweeters in our sample, just 10 percent of all possible hits, posted about the story only a few times. But more than 3,000 accounts in our set tweeted about Pizzagate five times or more. Among these were dozens of users who tweet so frequently – up to 600 times a day – that experts believe they were likely highly automated. Even more striking: 22 percent of the tweets in our sample were later deleted by the user. This could be a sign, Woolley says, of "someone sweeping away everything so that we can't follow the trail."

Next, we decided to cross-reference the most frequent Pizzagate tweeters with a list of 139 handles associated with Trump campaign staffers, advisers and surrogates. We also ran our entire sample against the list of accounts linked to Russia's Internet Research Agency. We found that at least 14 Russia-linked accounts had tweeted about Pizzagate, including @Pamela_Moore13, whose avatar is, aptly, an anonymous figure wrapped in an American flag; that account has been retweeted by such prominent Trump supporters as Donald Trump Jr., Ann Coulter and Roger Stone, the political operative who recommended Paul Manafort as Trump's campaign manager. (Special Counsel Robert Mueller recently indicted Manafort for money laundering as part of his investigation into possible collusion with Russian efforts to influence the presidential race.) "Well! Well! Well!" "Pamela Moore" tweeted on November 19th, 2016, above the fake news headline "FBI: Rumors About Clinton Pedophile Ring Are True."

The campaign's engagement went far deeper. We found at least 66 Trump campaign figures who followed one or more of the most prolific Pizzagate tweeters. Michael Caputo, a Trump adviser who tweeted frequently about Clinton's e-mails, followed 146 of these accounts; Corey Stewart, Trump's campaign chair in Virginia, who lost a tight primary race for governor in June, followed 115; Paula White-Cain, Trump's spiritual adviser, followed 71; Pastor Darrell Scott, a prominent member of Trump's National Diversity Coalition, followed 33. Flynn's son, Michael Flynn Jr., who followed 58 of these accounts, famously took the bait and was ousted from the Trump transition team in early December after tweeting, "Until #Pizzagate proven to be false, it'll remain a story."

Many of the Pizzagate tweeters had the characteristics of political bots – Twitter handles made up of random or semi-random letters and numbers and twin passions for conservative politics and pets (puppies and kitties win audience, Watts says). Others were all too human. Crystal Kemp, a 50-year-old grandmother who lives in Confluence, Pennsylvania, tweeted about the story more than 4,000 times in five weeks. I reached out to her via Facebook to ask why. “Didn’t want Hillary to win at any cost,” Kemp tells me, “but liked Trump from day one. I don’t really know that much about the Pizzagate thing. Everything I tweeted or retweeted was stuff that I found through my own research or from another follower.”

Kemp tweeted links to articles from well-known right-wing sites like Fox News and Breitbart. But she also shared stories from obscure outlets like ConservativeDailyPost.com, which appears to be among the fake-news sites that operated from Macedonia during the election. BuzzFeed had found that teenagers in the deindustrialized town of Veles published pro-Trump stories because they were profitable as click-bait. When I traveled to Macedonia last summer, Borce Pejcev, a computer programmer who has set up dozens of fake-news sites – for around 100 euros each – said it wasn’t quite that simple. Macedonians don’t invent fake news stories, he told me. “No one here knows anything about American politics. They copy and paste from American sites, maybe try to come up with more dramatic headline.” Fox News, TruePundit.com, DailyCaller.com, InfoWars and Breitbart, he said, were among the Macedonians’ most common source material (“Breit-bart was best”). Macedonians would’ve happily copied anti-Trump fake news too, he said. "Unfortunately, there weren't any good U.S. pro-Clinton fake-news sites to copy and paste."

That was exactly how the right-wing-media ecosystem worked during the 2016 campaign, explains Yochai Benkler, who directs the Berkman-Klein Center for the Internet and Society at Harvard. After the election, he and his colleagues mapped about 2 million campaign-news stories. He found that far-right-media outlets were organized extremely tightly around Breitbart and, to a lesser degree, FoxNews.com. "The right paid attention to right-wing sites, and the more right-wing they were, the more attention they got," Benkler says. More extreme sites would distort and exaggerate the claims, but they would use a "relatively- credible source" such as Breitbart as a validator. "Because they were repeated not only on the very far-fringe sites but also by sites that are at the center of this cluster, the right-wing disinformation circulated and amplified very quickly."

Douglas Hagmann is a self-employed private investigator and host of HagmannReport.com, a webcast that exposes the "New World Order agenda." It was Hagmann who – four days after Carmen Katz first posted the story and six days before Election Day – brought Pizzagate from social media to fake news' largest stage. On the November 2nd broadcast of InfoWars, arguably the most influential conspiracy-theory outlet in the country, with 7.7 million unique visitors to its website a month, Alex Jones asked Hagmann to tell his audience what sources had revealed about the e-mails recovered on Weiner's computer. "[T]he most disgusting aspect of this is the sexual angle," Hagmann said. "I don't want to be graphic or gross here. . . . Based on my source, Hillary did in fact participate on some of the junkets on the Lolita Express."

Anatomy of a Fake News Scandal

The story took off. Google Trends measures interest in topics among the 1.17 billion users of its search engine on a 0-100 scale. On October 29th, the day Katz posted the story on Facebook, searches for "Hillary" and "pedophile" ranked zero. Ninety-six hours later, when Hagmann "broke" the story on InfoWars, they scored 100.

In April, Hagmann agreed to meet with me for a look at his "courtroom-ready" documents on Pizzagate. His split-level home in Erie, Pennsylvania, is on a quiet leafy street. In the front yard, there's a small waterfall, a rock garden and a large sign warning that the place is under surveillance. He greeted me in the foyer wearing a suit and tie, his hair slicked back with Brylcreem, and led the way downstairs to his basement broadcast center.

In October 2016, Hagmann claimed, he "communicated" with a friend who knows someone affiliated with the NYPD. The friend of the friend had been on the "task force" that secured Weiner's computer and had copied documents onto a thumb drive "proving" Clinton and her associates were involved in pedophilia. "Now, I can't get him to give me the thumb drive," he said. "Or even admit to the fact that he had it." When I asked how he knew the files existed, he said, "I trust my source."

Hagmann then launched into a synopsis of three decades of rumors that Clinton and her associates are lesbians and perverts. He started with the claims of Cathy O'Brien, a conspiracy theorist from Muskegon, Michigan, who alleged that while held as a CIA sex slave, she was forced to service Hillary Clinton. Hagmann moved on to Clinton's "close" relationship with Podesta, and his brother Tony resemble sketches of the suspects in the 2007 disappearance of four-year-old Madeleine McCann in Portugal. "Sorry," Hagmann stopped himself. "I know this case is difficult. Circumstantial."

When I asked if he had verified anything, Hagmann shuffled some papers, lifting one sheet by a corner, like a poker player. With apparent reluctance, he turned over a color copy of an image showing a clean, uninjured boy wearing a green T-shirt in a dog cage. The child could have been playing or held hostage. "That might be a disturbing image," I said. "But I don't see what it has to do with Hillary Clinton." He shrugged. "You could say I have dog crap for answers and dog crap for sources," he said, adding later, "I hope you don't think this was a waste."

Rolling Stone Anatomy of a Fake News Scandal

The following month, at Awaken to the Shakin', a Bible conference in Gurnee, Illinois, Hagmann presented his evidence to an audience of about 40 middle-aged churchgoers. His courtroom-ready exhibits included the Wikipedia entry for "fake news," the New Oxford Dictionary definition of "post-truth," a quote by John Wayne, a photo of people sitting on a couch wearing horse masks, a photo of scars on the fingers of John Podesta. And the kicker – a photo of a decapitated body that Hagmann said was a victim of serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer and another of a sculpture by Louise Bourgeois in Tony Podesta's home, ironically titled "The Arch of Hysteria." The two images, he said, are shockingly similar.

All the same, two days after Hagmann's appearance on InfoWars, Erik Prince, the brother of Trump's secretary of education, Betsy DeVos, "confirmed" that the terrible rumor was true in an interview on Breitbart. Prince is best known as the founder of the private military company Blackwater USA, whose mercenaries shot and killed 17 unarmed Iraqi civilians in Baghdad's Nisour Square in 2007. He donated $250,000 to the Trump campaign and became an informal adviser on intelligence and security issues, traveling to the Seychelles during the transition to meet with a Kremlin associate in an attempt to create back-channel communications between Moscow and the president-elect. On Breitbart radio, Prince painted a picture sure to stir the far right. "Because of Weingate and the sexting scandal, the NYPD started investigating," he said. "They found a lot of other really damning criminal information, including money-laundering, including the fact that Hillary went to this sex island with convicted pedophile Jeffrey Epstein. Bill Clinton went there more than 20 times. Hillary Clinton went there at least six times."

The right-wing-media system went into overdrive. Prince's story was picked up and embellished by other right-wing outlets, and made its way back to InfoWars that afternoon. Citing Prince's interview, Jones fumed, "When I think about all the children Hillary Clinton has personally murdered and chopped up and raped . . . yeah, you heard me right. Hillary Clinton has personally murdered children." Jones' video was viewed on YouTube more than 427,000 times. Prince's interview was shared another 81,000 times. On

Long before October 28th, 2016, when Comey wrote to Congress that the FBI would be reexamining Clinton's use of a private e-mail server, her campaign knew they had a huge e-mail problem. In focus groups, voters conflated the case with the e-mails Russian operatives had hacked from the Democratic National Committee and Podesta, her campaign manager. Though U.S. intelligence agencies now agree that a Kremlin--associated group, Fancy Bear, hacked the e-mails – which WikiLeaks began posting less than an hour after The Washington Post published Trump's "grab them by the pussy" video – a senior Clinton campaign staffer tells me, "There was just more voyeuristic interest in the content of the e-mails than in how they were obtained."

The confusion was encouraged online by the likes of @DavidGoldbergNY. The e-mails on Weiner's laptop had nothing to do with Podesta's Gmail account, but one of his tweets of the Katz post included #podestaemails23. "That hashtag is a flag," Woolley says. "It suggests that @DavidGoldbergNY is attempting to get people to look at something." On message boards, amateur sleuths searched for encoded evidence in the Podesta e-mails. A particular source of fascination was an invitation from the performance artist Marina Abramovic for Podesta to attend a "Spirit Cooking dinner." Allegations started circulating that Clinton consumed semen, breast milk and menstrual blood.

The story still hadn't penetrated Clinton's campaign headquarters. They'd become inured to the avalanche of fake news – the rumors that she was on her deathbed, funding ISIS, even dissed by the pope. But when a Clinton campaign staffer noticed "Podesta Spirit Cooking Emails Reveal Clinton's Inner Circle as Sex Cult with Connections to Human Trafficking" on DangerandPlay.com become "Podesta Practices Occult Magic" on the Drudge Report, and then saw Alex Jones shouting that Clinton "is an abject, psychopathic demon from hell," who "smell[s] like sulfur," he went straight into Podesta's office at the campaign's Brooklyn headquarters. "You're not going to believe it," the aide told him. "Now you're a fucking witch."

It got even weirder after users on 8chan read a Podesta e-mail that revealed

Rolling Stone Anatomy of a Fake News Scandal

Pong pizzeria, James Alefantis. The citizen investigators considered Brock their archenemy – he'd founded Correct the Record, a Super PAC that defended Clinton against defamation by online trolls. Suddenly, they saw sinister meaning in any mention of pizza; for instance, the first letters in the words "cheese pizza" are the same as in "child porn."

Until November 2016, the Pizzagate hashtag had mostly referred to Trump's use of a fork and knife to eat pizza. But on November 4th, two days after Hagmann's appearance on InfoWars, Cassandra Fairbanks, then a reporter for Sputnik News (which U.S. intelligence says spreads Kremlin-directed-disinformation), tweeted, "I've literally spent the last hour wondering if podesta ingested sperm mixed with breast milk with his brother." In response, another user, @GodlessNZ, appears to have launched the hashtag: "Tweets assembling under #JohnMolesta and maybe #PizzaGate."

That day, Alefantis got a phone call from a reporter at The Washington City Paper seeking a comment about a rumor going viral on Reddit. "What's Reddit?" Alefantis asked.

It was just beginning. Even as the election came and went, several Twitter accounts tweeted exclusively about Pizzagate to a number of alt-right "influencers" – among them InfoWars and Brittany Pettibone, one of a handful of alt-right "girls" who regularly appear at the movement's events. At least one single-minded account, @Pizza_Gate, likely caught the attention of Mehmet Ali Önel, a Turkish TV anchor. The network Önel works for is linked to the government of President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan, which was facing for proposing a law that would risk decriminalizing pedophilia for offenders who married their victims. Önel, who has 196,000 Twitter followers, was one of dozens of Turkish commentators who claimed Americans had no right calling out Turkey for sex crimes with Pizzagate erupting in their own capital. One of the most shared Pizzagate tweets was posted by the anchor on November 16th. Roughly translated, it reads, "USA #PizzaGate shaken by the pedophilia scandals."

Among the users who picked up the thread was Jack Posobiec, a well-known alt-right troll whom Trump himself has retweeted. During the campaign, Posobiec was special-projects director for Citizens for Trump, a never-officially-organized voter-fraud prevention group. Several hours after Önel sent his November 16th tweet, Posobiec went to investigate Comet Ping Pong and another nearby pizzeria. Live-streaming the visit on Periscope, he described evidence of "what's really going on" – a double pane of glass near an oven, security cameras, a texting cashier. Posobiec paused, worrying his viewers might not understand the situation. "It's like in the movie Jurassic Park," he said. "Nedry had the shaving cream bottle. And you could press the top and a little bit of shaving cream came out. . . . The bottom part is where they had the dinosaur embryos."

The Twittersphere went wild. The previous day, our sample indicates there were roughly 6,000 tweets about Pizzagate. Now, it was closer to 55,000. Alefantis tried and failed to get Facebook and Twitter to remove the posts. (Both companies declined to comment for this story.) When the restaurant started getting death threats, Alefantis called the police, then the FBI, and got nowhere. "It turns out you can say anything about anyone online," he says. "It's your First Amendment right to terrorize."

James Alefantis on the lack of accountability for perpetrators of fake news stories online. Courtesy of Reveal.

Alefantis thought he'd finally scored a victory when The New York Times published an article debunking Pizzagate. He learned what the Clinton campaign found out too late. As Harvard's Benkler puts it, "The right-wing-media ecosystem had become so hyperpartisan, so self-referential and so superinsular it often simply ignored information that's disconfirming." Instead, right-wing social media referenced mainstream coverage as a way to "legitimate" their claims. On November 21st, the day the Times published its story, our sample shows Twitter traffic about Pizzagate hit unprecedented levels: some 120,000 tweets.

Trolls on message boards began posting whole "dossiers" of private information about Comet Ping Pong employees and top Democrats, down to the movies that Podesta ordered on Netflix. On November 22nd, when Reddit banned a Pizzagate subreddit for posting obviously stolen private information, a moderator responded, "We have all made life insurance videos. We have all vowed to continue this fight. You have only increased our number. This morning we were numerous, tonight we are legion." About 145,000 tweets flew that day.

The next day, InfoWars posted a video called "Pizzagate Is Real." On November 27th, Jones spent a half-hour explaining the story. "Something's being covered up," he told his audience. "All I know is God help us, we're in the hands of pure evil." Hours later, he released another video, "Down the #Pizzagate Rabbit Hole." On December 1st, the show posted "Pizzagate: The Bigger Picture." In North Carolina, Edgar Maddison Welch was obsessively watching much of this coverage. By the evening of December 4th, he was in solitary confinement in a Washington, D.C., jail.

Nearly a year after the election, in three separate hearings with members of Congress, executives from Twitter, Facebook and Google took turns expressing contrition for hosting Russia's attempts to manipulate U.S. public opinion. A Facebook vice president said it "pains us as a company" that foreign actors "abused our platform." Twitter's general counsel said he too was "troubled" that the power of Twitter was misused.

"There was this concept of 'Social media is going to save democracy,'" Woolley tells me. "Twitter didn't envision that powerful political actors were going to use social media in attempts to spread propaganda." Among the many strange aspects of Pizzagate was the fact that the story went viral after the election. All of the Russia-linked tweets we found were sent after November 8th. Bot networks appear to be tweeting out the hashtag to this day. Woolley suggests it could be an attempt to "bolster" Trump's position, to "win over people's hearts and minds." Clinton had lost the presidency, he says, but "she was not done in terms of her ability to be a representative of democratic ideals, or of the ideals that were oppositional to Donald Trump."

Watts, the cyber-security expert, doesn't know if Russia and the Trump campaign colluded on Pizzagate, or anything else. But both camps were he says. "The Russians don't create this whole [alt-right] movement. They just harness it." Of course, so did Trump. But Watts believes the Russians, at least, are playing for much higher stakes than one presidential election. "The goal is to create division between communities," he says. "It is making you not trust the state. It's eroding the mandate of elected officials so that they can't govern properly. It's making people want to not participate in democracy because they think it's corrupt. It's getting you to either believe that it's all stacked against you or you just opt out altogether because you don't know what to believe. When you don't know what to believe, you'll believe anything."

On this LIVE Friday, Nov. 4 edition of the Alex Jones Show, we look into Hillary Clinton's ties to occult rituals, including "spirit cooking." Investigative journalist Jon Rappoport reveals what this all means. Also NSA whistleblower William Binney explains what's going on deep inside intelligence communities. Doug Hagmann & Roger Stone are also on today's show.

How to Know if Your Child is Ready for Piano Lessons (Guest Post)
This post may contain affiliate links.

HOW YOUR CHILD IS READY FOR

Just to give you a quick introduction - I'm a stay at home mom and have one son who is 21 months old. I also teach private piano lessons on the side. Because I believe also recognizes the value in music education, we figured that would be a great topic of discussion for today.

Often, I get asked when age a child should start taking piano lessons. Age certainly has a lot to do with it, but there are some other things to factor in as well. So, I have a list of 4 things that I believe help a student become successful right from the start with piano lessons.

AGE
First, age is not going to determine whether or not your child will become a master pianist. I've seen some 5 year old kids fourth and some 9 year old kids that are totally uninterested and have no ability. But I've seen the same with 3 year olds. So, like I say age is only part of it. I started lessons when I was 7 and, as a general rule, I think that's a great age to start. That would be my recommendation.

ABILITY TO READ
This is huge. (To be clear, I'm not talking about "reading music." I'm talking about "reading" as in "reading books.") Sure, there are method books out there specifically designed for students who can't read but want to learn how to play the piano. It's definitely possible. But in my experience, sometimes it's better use of money and time to just wait the additional year or so it takes for your child to begin reading. I've seen that my piano students are able to learn more and at a faster pace when they are already reading. The ability to read is also a plus for the parents. Piano books have instructions in them and when you have a child that can read, they are able to function on their own a bit more for practice time.

--BEGIN TRANSCRIPT--

FEMALE REPORTER: Hi! Are you Mrs. Hagmann?

RENEE HAGMANN: Yeah, Renee Hagmann (dogs loudly barking), nice to meet you (some overtalk).

AMANDA ROBB: Hi, I'm Amanda.

RENEE HAGMANN: Hi Amanda.

AMANDA ROBB: This is my colleague, Laura.

LAURA STARECHESKI: Nice to meet you.

RENEE HAGMANN: She won't bite.

NARRATIVE V.O. AMANDA ROBB: So we went to his basement studio which is unbelievably decked out. There's an anchor chair and everything, and we asked for the court room ready documents. And he said they were at the copiers and that he hadn't kept a copy.

AMANDA ROBB: I mean on the 2nd you made a big declaration..

DOUGLAS HAGMANN: Yes..

AMANDA ROBB: ..to the world

DOUGLAS HAGMANN: Yes, I did. And that is based on the, I made that based in large part on information I got, I received from my sources.

AMANDA ROBB: Okay, and you trust them so much...

DOUGLAS HAGMANN: I do.

AMANDA ROBB: That you don't have to go back and like check it with anybody. You really believe him.

DOUGLAS HAGMANN: I think that's a little bit uhh, no, It's I think that there was enough supporting evidence or supporting documentation, not evidence, but documentation to substantiate the veracity of his assertions...now..

AMANDA ROBB: But what documentation? We don't have any!

DOUGLAS HAGMANN: Okay, if you look, oh, okay. Well, that's true. No, we don't have any direct...You're going to hit me, aren't you?

About Us

Stephen Quayle's Renaissance Precious Metals, has been in the precious metals business for over 34 years, located in Bozeman, Montana. As a former newsletter editor and author of over 10 books. Steve, has been providing his clients with gold, silver and platinum and palladium in physical form, thus providing growth and protection for his clients hard earned money. He has been outspoken, in encouraging those who want financial life assurance to adopt his business slogan - 'if you cant touch it you don't own it'.

Steve has been a precious metals trader for most of those years and has developed contacts world wide who have provided him with heads up information on the economy and whats going on behind the scenes, with very well connected individuals who know the market movers behind the headlines. Renaissance Precious Metals has been able to acquire precious metals when supply issues and disruptions kept the big guys oversold, and unable to acquire metals quickly.

Steve has been a radio talk show host for over 23 years and a much requested guest on some of the nations largest syndicated talk radio shows, he has been warning decades in advance that the manipulated spot price of the precious metals would move independently, and separate from, the controlled paper price of the precious metals. He was one of the most outspoken voices, 20 years ago, warning of the death of the dollar from global abandonment and stated "that both the Russian ruble and the Chinese Yuan would be backed by gold and other strategic commodities." While other "experts" started to echo the same sentiments 20 years after the fact, as Russia and China became more vocal against the us dollar, they are nowhere on record 20 years ago!

Financial survival is based on Steve's simple maxim-you want to move ahead of the panic, prior to the financial meltdown phase, having already acquired your precious metals not trying to acquire them during the panic, which will surely come. Simply stated you want to be where everyone else isn't so as not to be trampled by the herd.

As Steve Quayle says: "I will do my best to get you out of financial harms way as the stampeding hoof beats sound louder every day"! Give Steve a call - he is available, even on weekends, to help you with your precious metals purchases!

READER REVIEWS

"Ya' gotta read it to believe it. WOW!!! If you're looking for a run of the mill who done it, go check out a cheap dime store novel. This book has it all. I found myself inside each of the characters as I read it. You will find that the main character, Marc, has far more than a murder case on his hands. He's up to his eyeballs in pure evil. What pulled me most about this book is the truth of it and it was written in such a way that I was living it." Jude - Amazon

"I was amazed at how good the book was. I couldn't put it down and wound up only getting about 3 hours of sleep the other night so I could finish it." - Neil L.

"I think Mr. Hagmann may have a best seller on his hands... When I heard Mr. Hagmann make the announcement that Stained By Blood was coming out I had the impression it would be similar to the Franklin scandal of the same time period. SBB easily met my expectations. I would not want to spoil the story any more than I may already have so I'll just say this book will open your eyes. If you haven't read "The Franklin Scandal" by Nick Bryant you must read it also. Together you will have monumental insight into a very frightening reality. Congratulations on a very interesting book!" -Amazon review from reader

THE FINAL CRASH OF LARRY CASE

The demise of a wacky Little Rock private eye who used to spy on (and for) Bill Clinton and the Arkansas machine.

When the Maumelle, Arkansas district court on a recent Thursday evening found former private eye Larry Case guilty of drunken driving and resisting arrest, it wrote another bizarre footnote to Bill Clinton's political career. Case achieved notoriety in both the '92 and '96 presidential campaigns by peddling videotapes he claimed showed Clinton womanizing and using drugs. At the same time, there were rumors that Case was taking money from the Democratic National Committee. As with much in Case's strange life, his relations with Clinton and the Clinton camp were so involuted and ambiguous that some of his compatriots seriously thought he was a double agent.

The drunk driving trial was the first time in more than a decade in which Case was without high-level protection from Clinton appointees and protégés. Case, a hulking man with short-cropped chin whiskers, was in court after nearly running down Arkansas state trooper Larry Patterson in the parking lot of the old state police headquarters last June. (TAS readers will remember Corporal Patterson as one of the Governor's detail who went public in 1993 with accounts of Bill Clinton's sexual adventures.)

That incident capped a week in which Case, who packs 235 pounds on a 6'1" frame, seemed close to running amok. After accusing prominent Republicans across the country of having him tailed, he threatened his brother with a shotgun (prompting a still pending criminal charge) and only by a stroke of luck escaped getting shot himself. It turned out that Case was indeed being followed, an odd tale of which more later. More importantly, it emerged that Case's June crisis would never have reached such a dangerous pass if he had not been given a carte blanche by the surviving leader of the local Bill Clinton—Jim Guy Tucker political faction, Pulaski County Prosecutor Mark Stodola. (In spite of strong support from Bill Clinton's fund-raisers, Stodola lost a race for Congress last year and relinquished his post as the chief state prosecutor for Little Rock this January.)

Case had even higher connections. An American Spectator investigation reveals that Case had frequent access to then-Governor Clinton's head of the state police, in spite of his own dubious reputation. Several accounts, including Case's own, agree that he once met personally with Clinton in the governor's mansion to pass on tapes claiming to show a Republican opponent using drugs with a mistress.

Whether or not Case acted as a double agent in peddling anti-Clinton material during the presidential campaigns, his trajectory sheds light on a sinister side of Clinton's own career. As governor, Clinton eagerly used a demi-monde of private eyes and shady operators for political intelligence and, by some accounts, intimidation. Whether he would misuse the tremendous resources of the presidency for the same purpose remains an urgent question.

Case declined to be interviewed for this article without clearance from his lawyer. "I've been catching so much flak around here," he said, "I'm not going to cause any more trouble." But a picture of his career emerges from boxes full of files, tapes, and transcripts accumulated in the past two decades by the Arkansas Board of Private Investigators and Private Security Agencies, the regulator of the private security industry.

A FRIEND IN HIGH PLACES

The saga begins in the late 1960's, when Case began running errands for various factions in the Little Rock Police Department. Former Little Rock Police Chief Walter (Sonny) Simpson later wrote a recommendation for Case, calling his moral character "comparable to acceptable community standards." He received his private investigator's license from the state police-administered P.I. Board in 1971.

Even then, however, Case had scrapes with the law, says former municipal judge and Whitewater witness David Hale. Now serving a federal prison term for a Whitewater-related business fraud, Hale was an assistant city prosecutor in 1972-73 when his office considered indicting Case. Hale doesn't remember the charges, but he does clearly recall that they were quashed on the orders of the head prosecutor, a rising politician and later governor named Jim Guy Tucker.

Case worked as a lone private eye for most of the 1970's, occasionally signing on as investigator for several local police departments. At least once, however, he claimed to be a Pulaski County deputy sheriff when he wasn't, and he was convicted in municipal court for criminal impersonation. In 1979, after several hearings, the Arkansas Board of Private Investigators and Private Security Agencies, the regulator of the private security industry, denied his license renewal. In addition to his impersonation conviction, the board cited "a condition of habitual drunkenness," as shown by "two violent brawls, while intoxicated, in the same public place within a year."

But Case didn't lose his political touch. In 1980, he began to do odd jobs for State Land Commissioner William J. McCuen. (Later elected secretary of state, McCuen is now serving a 17-year state prison sentence for political corruption.) In 1984, Case used his political muscle to reapply for his private investigator's license. Case faced stiff resistance from the state police officers who administered the daily affairs of the P.I. Board. But strange things started to happen. State police director Tommy L. Goodwin handed the application personally to the board administrator, Sgt. Bill Eddins, and assistant director Richard Rail dropped by the office to push it along. Eddins said he needed the application fee up front, and to his surprise received a check from Little Rock police chief Sonny Simpson.

Puzzled that Case's fee was paid by Little Rock city funds, Eddins called Case's nominal employer, a veteran private eye named Sam Tatom. "I'm doing this strictly for Goodwin and Simpson," Tatom replied, according to a transcript in the P.I. Board's voluminous files on Case. "He give them some information Simpson and them wanted, and he's been working with Simpson's people."

Case continued working with Col. Goodwin and Goodwin's people. A former Arkansas state trooper said that Case made frequent visits to Col. Goodwin's office. "The colonel would close his door, and he never closed his door." The trooper said that he asked Goodwin why he allowed Case such access. "Goodwin told me," the trooper recalled, "that the Governor wanted to know what Case knew."

CASE AND CLINTON

During Clinton's tense 1990 re-election campaign, this curiosity led his chief of staff, Henry Oliver, to meet with Case in the office of a North Little Rock pawn shop, Arkansas Pawn Furniture and Sporting Goods. Case was peddling a taped interview with a woman who claimed to have flown to Texas with Republican candidate Sheffield Nelson for a drug party with a prominent business partner. The charges against the buttoned-down Nelson were so implausible that they never entered the campaign, and Clinton's spokesmen were later at a loss to explain the meeting.

"What you do with Larry, a lot of times you meet with him to get him out of your hair," said Michael Gaudin, Clinton's press aide, when the story reached the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette in October 1992. "Case has a reputation for sleaziness, and you don't know what he is likely to do. He evidently spends his life in the sludge of the world and basically our opinion is we don't want to have anything to do with him."

Yet the Democrat-Gazette reported that Oliver asked Col. Doug Harp, a former director of the state police and Clinton appointee to the P.I. Board, to review Case's material. Harp confirmed his meeting with Case, but Oliver said he couldn't recall it.

And even though Clinton's staff saw Case as a sludge-dweller, they were still willing to give him personal access to the governor. On September 29, 1991, Case went to the governor's mansion for a 7:30 a.m. meeting with Clinton himself. State police director Goodwin was there along with Jim Pledger, then the acting chief of staff. Case says that Capt. Raymond "Buddy" Young, head of the governor's state police escort, made an appearance and then left.

"We was all discussing girlfriends and drugs and s—t like that," Case said later in a taped conversation with state P. I. Board investigators, "and then we discussed what they was supposed to be doing for me. I'd admit, you know, they cut a deal with me."

Case thought he'd been promised a high-level post at the Alcoholic Beverage Control office. Instead, Pledger arranged a job interview for a Highway Department road crew. Case, however, passed it up.

Clinton's critics denounced the episode, and particularly the state police involvement, when it came to light in 1992. "It scares me and it should scare people around the country,” said Sheffield Nelson. “It smacks of Orwell’s book 1984 when Big Brother watched everything.”

ENTER MARK STODOLA

Yet Case still had protection, this time from a new player on the Clinton-Tucker axis. In 1990, Minnesota native Mark Stodola won an uncontested election for the strategic post of Pulaski County prosecuting attorney. In this position he could decline to bring cases against political friends and he could make trouble for enemies. (Stodola showed his capacity for mischief last December when, in almost his last official act, he indicted Whitewater witness David Hale on separate state charges. According to the local press, associate independent counsel W. Hickman Ewing had met with Stodola just the day before to ask him to leave Hale alone.)

Stodola’s friends included Clinton, Tucker, and their business associate James McDougal, owner of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan. As a law student at the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville, Stodola volunteered as scheduling coordinator for the 1974 congressional campaign of law professor Bill Clinton. Later he wound up with the job of Little Rock city attorney, in part through the patronage of Jim Guy Tucker. Along the way he was chosen president of the Pulaski County, Arkansas and national Young Democrats.

When Stodola ran unsuccessfully for Congress in 1996, he collected contributions from some of President Clinton’s now famous benefactors. The Tyson Foods PAC and senior executives, including presidential friend James B. Blair, donated at least $3,000. The Stephens Overseas Services PAC gave $3,500. Stodola even received $1,000 from a central figure in the John Huang/Democratic National Committee fund-raising scandals, former Little Rock restaurateur turned China trading partner Charles Yah Lin Trie.

Stodola’s friends helped him with his personal finances, too. Pulaski County real estate records contain a mortgage on three Little Rock lots for Stodola, his wife, and another couple, made by Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan. The loan of $169,000, dated January 29, 1986, allowed Stodola and his partners to retire another mortgage on the property in February 1986. They netted at least $132,000.

To their surprise, the state police administrators of the P.I. Board discovered that Stodola’s friendships included Larry Case. By 1992, complaints about Case were pouring into the Board. State police investigator Wes Adams had opened five files on the free-wheeler, who continued his visits to state police director Goodwin. The most developed complaint, which led Case to surrender his license and pay a $13,500 fine, concerned billing for work the board determined Case hadn’t performed. But Case refused to comply with a subpoena, issued for the board by the state attorney general, and the issue turned into a huge run-around with Stodola’s office.

At investigator Wes Adams’s request, an assistant county prosecutor indicted Case for failing to comply. The court had already scheduled the trial when word came down that Stodola had ordered the case dropped. Stodola gave several different reasons. He even wrote Adams a crisp letter dated July 1, 1992, arguing that the attorney general’s subpoena form was invalid. Exasperated, Adams asked to be relieved of the case and wrote to the assistant attorney general, “Wade, I am getting tired of the ‘pussy footing’ by the Prosecuting Attorney’s Office in reference to Mr. Case.”

As Arkansas governor, Bill Clinton eagerly used a demi-monde of private eyes and shady operators for political intelligence and, by some accounts, intimidation. What has he done as U.S. president?

By this time, however, Case had developed a new and even more bizarre pursuit.

On June 25, he wrote Col. Goodwin that he was retiring his license as private investigator because he had just signed a $545,000 contract with a “Major National News Organization.”<sup>1</sup>

CASE AND THE BIG TIME

With the presidential campaign, Case had discovered a national market for his specialty, spinning dirt into sludge. But his target now was Bill Clinton, who just the year before had listened eagerly to Case’s tales about Arkansas Republicans. (Although startling, the switch was no surprise to some who knew Case. “His way of getting close to people,” says one former state trooper who followed his career, “is to dig up dirt on them.”) Case found potential clients in the Los Angeles Times, NBC News, and an unspecified national tabloid.

He signed a contract with Repaca, Inc., to provide information for the TV news show “A Current Affair” about “Bill Clinton’s romantic life, sexual affairs, involvement with drugs and other indiscretions.” According to the contract, Case agreed to attempt to deliver “a copy of a certain apology letter (‘Apology letter’) from Bill Clinton to a debutante who allegedly was involved with Mr. Clinton (‘Debutante’) and to assist Repaca in locating the Debutante and a prostitute which with [sic] Mr. Clinton allegedly had sexual relations (‘Prostitute’).” Case apparently never produced the Debutante, the Prostitute, or the Apology Letter, missing out on the $45,000 the contract offered for on-air interviews, but he later said he received $4,000 for his information.

Case’s stock in trade were videos purporting to show Roger and Bill Clinton using drugs. In fact he did have access to state police surveillance videos and audiotapes from the 1984 drug case against Roger Clinton, although no one could ever identify Bill on them. And this material came from a surprising source, Col. Tommy Goodwin, the head of the state police. (In October 1992, Goodwin acknowledged giving Case copies that March of three videos of Roger Clinton, which he said had previously been released to a member of the news media. The state police subsequently misplaced one office copy, and Goodwin wrote Case, "We would appreciate you furnishing this agency a copy of the lost tape to complete our file.")

<sup>1</sup>Case added that Stodola had also advised him he had a possible cause of action “against certain individuals, as AGENTS or INVESTIGATORS, acting on behalf of the ARKANSAS STATE POLICE ET AL. which I will be having my attorney look at.” In December 1992, Case did indeed file a federal suit against the state police and some 35 other defendants, including President-elect Clinton, alleging that they conspired to libel him and violate his civil rights. He apparently had in mind the P.I. Board hearing that September that revoked his license and fined him $13,500. Federal Judge Henry Woods dismissed the suit the following May.

Right after his disciplinary hearing that September, Case called Eddins and Adams of the P. I. Board to meet him confidentially at a Shoney's Restaurant on the other side of town. He wanted to tell them about his contacts with Goodwin. The investigators asked repeatedly why Goodwin would feed him material damaging to Governor Clinton. "I couldn't never read it," replied Case, "I could never read whether he was wanting me to get Clinton or leave him alone."

Case's career as a media researcher culminated in a bizarre incident with David Bossie, later a key staffer in the Senate Whitewater investigation, who is widely respected for his command of the documentation. At the time Bossie worked for Floyd Brown's Presidential Victory Committee, notorious among the "mainstream" for the Willie Horton television ads that helped defeat Michael Dukakis in 1988. Brown was collecting material for a book on Bill Clinton that was later published as Slick Willie. At the beginning of September, the book's publisher offered Case a $10,000 retainer for files and tapes he said he had stored for safekeeping in Phoenix, Arizona, provided he produced the cache by the end of the week.

Bossie, the publisher's representative Deborah Stone and Case were about to board a flight to Phoenix when Case suddenly demanded his $10,000. Stone urged him to board the flight. "She said, 'Get on the airplane. I'll give you $1,000 if you get on the airplane,'" Case later recounted. But he held out for the full amount. Accounts differ on what followed. Case said he pushed Bossie out of the way to reclaim his bags. Bossie said Case punched him.

With this spotty track record, Case never realized the fantastic sums that he asked for his tapes. At the end of 1992 he declared himself indigent and asked the federal court to accept his suit against the state police in forma pauperis.

THE CRASH OF '96

Rumors about Case's tapes, and a million dollar asking price, continued to circulate during the 1996 campaign, but the market for his material went into deep depression. Case was reduced to sending out flyers labeled "The Untold Truth," offering his "Documented—Certifiable" videos by mail order. "Cocaine Use and Other," "Cocaine Purchase," and "Conspiracy * Bribery * Clintons & Others" were available for $49.95 each. His highest-priced item was an "audio exclusive" recording of his 1992 negotiations with Clinton's opponents. "Washington D.C. Conspiracy Meeting Taped," went the blurb. "Floyd Brown, David Bossie, Debbie Stone and [Wall Street Journal editorial writer] John Fund. The Unwanted Republicans. $495.00 ea."

By this time, Case was absorbed with an emotional crisis, apparently triggered when he concluded that he was being followed by a mysterious stranger. No hallucination, his tail was a freelance researcher named Wayne Willott, who occasionally contributed to the talk show of presidential son Michael Reagan. Last June, Willott was visiting Larry Nichols of Conway, Arkansas, a fount of anti-Clinton material, when they discovered that Case had staked out Nichols's house. Nichols was convinced that Case had been hired to harass him "by the Democratic National Committee and Betsey Wright," although he said he wasn't free to release corroborating evidence. While Case followed Nichols, Willott began to tail Case.

Around June 11, Case noticed his shadow, and freaked out. He began to visit the state police headquarters of the P.I. Board to complain. He also left a threatening message on the answering machine at Floyd Brown's Citizens United group, which staffers promptly forwarded to Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr. In a family dispute at the home of his 80-year-old mother, where Case now lives, he pulled a shotgun on his brother Donald.

The crisis phase began around 8:00 a.m. on Friday, June 14, when Case accosted Corporal Larry Patterson at breakfast at Andy's Restaurant, near the state police building that houses the P.I. Board and Patterson's current assignment, the Motor Vehicle Division. According to Patterson's report, Case threw down an I.D. card signed by Mark Stodola and said he wanted to take Patterson to the Prosecuting Attorney's office for an interview. "He was shaking and his voice was breaking," Patterson said. Patterson declined and called Stodola's office. An assistant denied that Case worked for them and agreed to issue a warrant for criminal impersonation. An hour later she called back to say "that Mr. Stodola had said under no circumstance would he issue a warrant for Larry Case's arrest."

Around noon the next Monday, Case returned to the P.I. Board with another complaint about his mysterious follower. A secretary told Patterson that Case had just left, and the uniformed trooper walked to the parking lot to catch him. Case was in the car, just rounding the circular driveway in the visitor's lot when Patterson raised his left hand to stop him. Case didn't slow down, and Patterson reached for his revolver. "I didn't think Larry would clear leather before Case got him," said one witness, but Case screeched to a halt about five inches from Patterson's leg.

Patterson booked Case for drunken driving, and his saga ended January 23 in night court in suburban Maumelle. Case was fined a total of $1,175 for drunken driving, resisting arrest, and refusing to take a breathalyzer test. His driver's license was suspended for 270 days. "If he's going to do any following," gloated Larry Nichols, "he's got to do it from a bicycle."

Case's sordid career poses questions of national importance. His sludge-dredging talents found a ready audience among a circle of politicians who found it in their interest to protect him from the normal course of the law. We have been accused of disreputable muck-raking ourselves, but we should underscore that scandal-mongering is infinitely more serious when it is sponsored by the power of the state. After trying to exploit Case and finding him wanting, the mainstream press may deplore the way he tried to peddle dirt to Clinton's "extreme right-wing" opponents. We, for one, savor the irony that he owed his career to the protection of Clinton and his political cronies. ❧

I don't think so. This is what I asked them. Very vague on purpose.

"I've been wanting to report on the refugee camps for the Syrians in Turkey, Jordan and elsewhere. Did the UN issue a report on their various visits to the camps? If so could you kindly direct me to it? I can only find press releases on the website."

Hi; there is no report per se, but the SG spoke about his visits to camps in Jordan and Turkey when he was there. Those press encounters took place on 7 December 2013 and can be found on our website. Thanks.

Setting the Record Straight: Joint Response Addressing the Character Assassinations Underway

Joint Statement by Steve Quayle & Douglas J. Hagmann

Unfortunately, there are times when one must say, "enough!"

We issue this joint statement as obedient watchmen as referenced in chapter six of the Book of Jeremiah to address very slanderous and libelous public accusations that have been made against us by two individuals, Kirk McLeod, using the fictitious name Michael Erevna, and Marinka Peschmann. Our statement is not made out of haste, but only after a lengthy period of abundant prayerful consideration. Our response does not bring us pleasure, nor does it originate from any carnal desire to be proven correct or without fault in the eyes of man, but in obedience with God's Word.

We make this statement free of any destructive antipathy, unlike those who have made charges against us, our positions as watchmen and our ministry. We intend for this to be our first and last public response to this matter.

We approach our positions as watchmen with the sobriety and solemnity that is required for this responsibility, and understand that it is our charge to provide accurate and scripturally sound information and doctrine to those who seek it. We understand that we serve solely at the pleasure of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and furthermore understand that we will be accountable for our actions before God. It is God who will judge our earthly ministry, taking note of those souls who have been brought to Him through our obedience and willingness as His vessels using all venues available to us.

Adherence to sound Biblical doctrine is a Scriptural imperative from which there must be no deviation. As watchmen, we understand that we will be judged more harshly for squandering our responsibility, knowingly or unwittingly, or by creating or facilitating any doubt that would cause anyone to stray from unity under God. This includes remaining silent in the face of doubts created by an abundance of malice by those who are deliberately causing confusion, chaos and enmity among the body of the church and God's remnant. We know that God is neither the source of confusion nor chaos, and that this condition serves only the master of lies and deception.

History is replete with examples of many who have attempted to wrest souls from God and derail watchmen through numerous overt and covert means. Although they are not always evident, they can often be identified by the chaos, confusion, and unrest they create, directly or indirectly within the body of the church. We are bearing witness to this with greater frequency as the war between good and evil ramps up with each passing day.

Just as God has made way for us the ability and responsibility to act as purveyors of truthful information, He has also commanded us, through Scripture, to protect it and protect those who are righteously seeking God and the truth through our platforms.

Consistent with the Holy Scripture, we are publishing this statement as a result of the many emails we have received, individually and collectively, about the slanderous and libelous statements and postings by two individuals named herein in public forums and venues. These accusations have caused chaos, confusion and doubt among some as they are one sided, contextually biased, and selectively fabricated. For us to allow any doubt and confusion about these public accusations is to facilitate chaos. To respond, however, is to be obedient.

Matthew 18:6 is clear: "[B]ut whoever causes one of these little ones who believe in me to sin, it would be better for him to have a great millstone fastened around his neck and to be drowned in the depth of the sea."

Points of Fact: Abundance of Malice

As many readers and listeners know, we've been subjected to a well-coordinated and malicious campaign of slander and libel over the last several months by two individuals who we once trusted, generously provided airtime, financial support, and for whom we solicited the support of others. Both were introduced to us telephonically by third parties.

It is relevant to note here that it is our policy, when dealing with individuals using false names or pseudonyms on air and in published reports, is contingent on two-(2) conditions. The first is that they have legitimate reasons for doing so (e.g. whistleblower status), we are informed that the name is a pseudonym, and most importantly, we know their true identity. In the case of Kirk McLeod, we failed to exercise due diligence.

We never met either Kirk McLeod, a/k/a Michael Erevna or Marinka Peschmann in person, although had numerous telephone conversations with both. Initially and throughout our relationship with Erevna/McLeod, he sought airtime on The Hagmann and Hagmann Report, and link status on SteveQuayle.com to elevate his visibility on the internet. To that end, Erevna/McLeod appeared twice on The Hagmann & Hagmann Report, initially on 13 October 2013 with Steve Quayle.

Concurrent with his initial appearance, Erevna/McLeod described himself as a man of little means and few assets, and was in dire need of financial assistance. Accordingly, during his appearance, we asked our listeners to pray for Erevna/McLeod, and for those of means with the desire to advance his research, contribute and support "Michael Erevna" as verified in this unedited excerpted audio clip from October 8, 2013:

To assist Michael Erevna personally as his situation was described as "extremely dire," Steve Quayle and another generous professional colleague gifted the sum of $5,000.00 ($2,500.00/each) to McLeod from their personal funds without any desire, request or expectation of reciprocation or repayment.

Subsequent to Erevna/McLeod's initial appearance, we began to become uneasy with the behavior of Erevna/McLeod, his elusiveness in answering certain questions that included, but was not limited to his professional connections. Accordingly, we initiated a due diligence investigation and found the following.

Kirk McLeod

Michael Erevna does not legally exist, and was actually determined to be Kirk McLeod, the Executive Director of Spark Webber, an IT company based in Mount Kisco, New York. It was further determined that McLeod, individually and through his company, provided work to such government entities as the Pentagon, Lockheed Martin, Boeing, etc. In sum and substance, the very person who was speaking about deception within the government, among other issues, was found to have deep connections to the computer systems at the Pentagon and non-governmental entities that provide direct support of the military-industrial complex.

A current resident of Mount Kisco, Westchester County, New York, McLeod is using a company, unregistered in the state of New York by the New York State Department of State by the acronym ATSI to collect monetary contributions for his "research." This is separate from his position as Executive Director of Spark Webber.

On November 11, 2012, Kirk McLeod filed a federal lawsuit in the United States District Court of Connecticut for racial discrimination. The initial filing can be accessed HERE. The suit was filed against his employer, which is an indirect subsidiary of the Royal Bank of Scotland Group.

A summary filing of specific answers to the complaint is updated HERE.

It is relevant to note that although the suit remains open, McLeod's personal attorney ceased to represent him, filing injunctive relief with the court on October 15, 2013 (48 hours after his appearance on The Hagmann & Hagmann Report), citing irreconcilable differences in their working relationship.

While we post, publish and speak using our own true names, operating not under the cloak of anonymity, but complete transparency, it is reasonable to ask why it is necessary for an alleged Christian truth seeker to hide behind a fictitious identity if he is not an active whistle blower or has anything to hide. Any reasonable person would consider this omission alone a serious violation of trust.

As truth became ever more elusive to us, we opted not to provide any more airtime or coverage of Kirk McLeod (Michael Erevna), or anyone else directly or indirectly involved in this issue. For reasons we can only speculate, McLeod became intent on making nuisance type allegations on the Internet, which we ignored.

It was during this period, however, that Marinka Peschmann became involved with Kirk McLeod under his false identity, Michael Erevna, and initiated an increasingly insipid series of slanderous, libelous and malicious attacks against us that are completely untruthful, deliberately misrepresented, or contextually inaccurate. With regard to Marinka Peschmann, a columnist terminated from a Canadian website and other political sites, she was an invited guest on The Hagmann & Hagmann Report on December 21, 2012 to discuss, in part, her book on the death of White House Counsel Vince Foster. Her premise contained in her book proved to be unpopular.

During several private subsequent telephone conversations with Doug Hagmann between December 23, 2012 and June 5, 2013, Peschmann complained of poor book sales and lack of promotion by The Hagmann & Hagmann Report.

Following an incident in 2013 when an unusual telephone ring back and caller ID on the office telephone of Doug Hagmann suggested some type of electronic surveillance was being conducted, Marinka Peschmann offered to investigate and file FOIA inquiries with the appropriate federal agencies. In fact, she was persistent. In retrospect, this persistence should have been an indication something was amiss. Pursuant to her request, however, Hagmann provided a sworn affidavit to Peschmann and cooperated fully with her investigation.

Her allegations of non-receipt are patently false as the sworn documents were submitted and remain on file. This should be without question, as her self-stated journalistic prowess would never allow her to file FOIA requests without first having a fully sworn affidavit of facts in hand. One should thoughtfully consider this fact alone, as her actions, when viewed through her own statements, would make her either inconceivably incompetent or deliberately untruthful, or perhaps both.

During this time, Hagmann was informed by a reliable editor of an international news website that Peschmann was angry that he would not promote her book about Vince Foster due to a disagreement with her conclusions outlined in her book. Ms. Peschmann immediately became extremely agitated and told this editor and others that she was going to "take [him] down," and "do everything possible to ruin [him]" as a result.

Upon learning of these comments and feeling that the relationship of trust was questionable, at best, Hagmann requested that Peschmann immediately cease and desist any representation in his name in this or any other matters. By this time, Peschmann furnished the NSA FOIA reply to Hagmann, who erroneously referred to the NSA FOIA number as a "file number." It was upon learning that Hagmann had no desire to be represented by Peschmann when she began her rabid attacks to malign his reputation, hanging her hat on this innocuous error. As an aside and contrary to the claims of Peschmann, Hagmann never threatened to sue Peschmann, although did inform her of the desire to seek legal counsel on matters related to the core matter. Given the curious obsession of Peschmann with Hagmann, one would think she would produce authenticated proof of her accusation. She has not, as none exists.

Straining to maintain relevance and angry over being dropped from representing Hagmann in the press, Peschmann spoke telephonically to a few of our colleagues, stating her intentions to "ruin Hagmann and Quayle" by publishing a report claiming that the information contained in the sworn affidavit was a lie and we were profiting from fear. This resonated with former guest Michael Erevna (Kirk McLeod) and together, they began their public campaign of slander and libel in the fall of 2014.

Despite being a self-proclaimed journalist who claims to always speak and write the truth, it is evident that Peschmann was either a willing participant in propagating the false name of Michael Erevna on her website, or failed to conduct the necessary due diligence pertaining to his fictitious identity, even after having reason to do so. One should thoughtfully consider this fact as well, as her intentional propagation of this fictitious identity, would again make her either inconceivably incompetent or deliberately untruthful, or perhaps both.

Yet another issue Peschmann has raised as being untruthful is the allegation that the former website of Douglas J. Hagmann was never the target of termination by its host server, GoDaddy. According to Peschmann, whose journalistic abilities and motives should be much clearer by now, the fate of HomelandSecurityUS.com rested on Hagmann's ability to pay $50.00. Investigation would have found the publication of this email from GoDaddy, sent on June 22, 2012:

Additionally, Peschmann and McLeod have maliciously misrepresented one of the most trusted tools in carrying our broadcast: the Hagmann & Hagmann App. Prominent on her website (as well as on McLeod's), they devote much print space and feigned outrage over the apparent intrusiveness of the tool. Perhaps the best example of the lack of journalistic prowess of Peschmann and the IT abilities of McLeod exists here, as what they portray as an App that wants listeners' private information is merely showing the default settings of the user's phone. Unlike Peschmann or McLeod, we verified these facts with the creator of the app after this ludicrous accusation for clarification.

As you might be beginning to see, there seems to be something much more sinister propelling McLeod and Peschmann aside from mere maliciousness, duplicitous and deceit. Their obsession has been quite disconcerting to us.

Lastly, although perhaps most importantly, Peschmann crossed into serious territory when she published her accusations that Douglas Hagmann lied about a police action that took place as a result of a very personal and private incident involving his wife, his ill father-in-law and his caregiver at that time. Hagmann went on record and spoke about this incident shortly after it happened. Unknown to Peschmann, however, is that the person she spoke with at the police department contacted Doug Hagmann within 5 minutes of Peschmann calling, to make him aware of the predisposition sensed during her inquiry. Perhaps Peschmann forgot that Doug Hagmann has been an investigator in the private sector for 30 years and knows the clerks and brass of the local police force well.

Unfortunately, as this incident is part of a much larger issue that has caused much pain and anguish to Hagmann's wife and immediate family. As such and considering the ongoing nature of the matter, Doug Hagmann has chosen to protect his family from further strife over trying to satisfy the strangely obsessive needs of a so-called professional. Sadly, it is expected that Peschmann will not respect such boundaries, regardless of the fragility of this situation and the family members involved. So be it.

Meanwhile, Mr. McLeod, using the name Michael Erevna, vociferously condemns us for allegedly profiting from spreading fear porn under the banner of Christianity. He portrays a sense of revulsion from our legitimate attempts to inform the public of the threats to our freedoms, and even warns people not to contribute to our efforts in any manner. While he appears to find disdain with our efforts, he himself appears to have established a fictitious company named ATSI in Mount Kisco, NY which he uses to accept contributions. Research with the New York State Department of State, however, found no record of this being a registered business within the state of New York under his real or fictitious name.

Again, he has never publicly admitted the monies he received to assist him with his research, and never disclosed his business entanglements.

Meanwhile, Ms. Peschmann continues her campaign of lies against us as well, obvious investing an incredible amount of time writing prolifically and actively encouraging others to join her to "expose" us in our Christian endeavors. Any person of reasonable sensibilities would be wary of the time and effort she, in collusion with McLeod and others, are committing to their endeavors, and look closely at the personal and professional alliances and history both have but have deliberately chosen not to include.

Although we could expose more, we feel this is sufficient and have neither the time nor the desire to hurt anyone. Our only desire is to briefly address this unfortunate situation.

To our listeners and readers, we submit to you that we are seeing exactly what author Tom Horn wrote about in book Blood on the Altar, where he writes about sinister demonic forces assailing true Christian ministries. Excerpted from page 31:

"...just about every Bible expositor I know has been tirelessly harassed online the last few years by fake defenders of the faith."

"With that in mind, the next time you are online reading some diatribe about Chuck Missler, Gary Stearman, Steve Quayle, David Flynn, J.R. Church, L.A. Marzulli, Cris Putnam, Jonathan Cahn, yours truly, or any of the other current favorite targets, ask yourself if the hatchet people attacking them ever bothered to obey Scripture..."

"[B]e careful little eyes what you read, because destructive forces seek to contaminate your mind and spirit (see Prov. 4:23-27) in order to prep you for service to the dark side."

Clearly, this is a spiritual war and the unseen hand of the enemy is at work. It should be crystal clear in light of the disturbing, patently offensive and blasphemous image published by Kirk McLeod, under the name Michael Erevna on his website, using the image of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, as the basis of a caricature of Steve Quayle.

The spirit of truth will always prevail in spite of our humanity. 1 John Chapter 4, verse 6 instructs us to know the spirits – whether they are of God or not of God. After all the slander, libel, castigation and impingement against the truth, the truth is still the truth.

"We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.”

[KJV]

For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth. 2 Co 13:8 [KJV]

The truth will always prevail in spite of our humanity.

Indeed, there is Blood on the Altar.

Unfortunately, there are times when one must say, “enough!”

We issue this joint statement as obedient watchmen as referenced in chapter six of the Book of Jeremiah to address very slanderous and libelous public accusations that have been made against us by two individuals, Kirk McLeod, using the fictitious name Michael Erevna, and Marinka Peschmann. Our statement is not made out of haste, but only after a lengthy period of abundant prayerful consideration. Our response does not bring us pleasure, nor does it originate from any carnal desire to be proven correct or without fault in the eyes of man, but in obedience with God’s Word. We make this statement free of any destructive antipathy, unlike those who have made charges against us, our positions as watchmen and our ministry. We intend for this to be our first and last public response to this matter.

We approach our positions as watchmen with the sobriety and solemnity that is required for this responsibility, and understand that it is our charge to provide accurate and scripturally sound information and doctrine to those who seek it. We understand that we serve solely at the pleasure of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and furthermore understand that we will be accountable for our actions before God. It is God who will judge our earthly ministry, taking note of those souls who have been brought to Him through our obedience and willingness as His vessels using all venues available to us.

Relevant and Entertaining

As watchmen, we understand that we will be judged more harshly for squandering our responsibility, knowingly or unwittingly, or by creating or facilitating any doubt that would cause anyone to stray from unity under God. This includes remaining silent in the face of doubts created by an abundance of malice by those who are deliberately causing confusion, chaos and enmity among the body of the church and God's remnant. We know that God is neither the source of confusion nor chaos, and that this condition serves only the master of lies and deception.

History is replete with examples of many who have attempted to wrest souls from God and derail watchmen through numerous overt and covert means. Although they are not always evident, they can often be identified by the chaos, confusion, and unrest they create, directly or indirectly within the body of the church. We are bearing witness to this with greater frequency as the war between good and evil ramps up with each passing day.

Just as God has made way for us the ability and responsibility to act as purveyors of truthful information, He has also commanded us, through Scripture, to protect it and protect those who are righteously seeking God and the truth through our platforms.

Consistent with the Holy Scripture, we are publishing this statement as a result of the many emails we have received, individually and collectively, about the slanderous and libelous statements and postings by two individuals named herein in public forums and venues. These accusations have caused chaos, confusion and doubt among some as they are one sided, contextually biased, and selectively fabricated. For us to allow any doubt and confusion about these public accusations is to facilitate chaos. To respond, however, is to be obedient.

Matthew 18:6 is clear: "[B]ut whoever causes one of these little ones who believe in me to sin, it would be better for him to have a great millstone fastened around his neck and to be drowned in the depth of the sea."

Points of Fact: Abundance of Malice

As many readers and listeners know, we've been subjected to a well-coordinated and malicious campaign of slander and libel over the last several months by two individuals who we once trusted, generously provided airtime, financial support, and for whom we solicited the support of others. Both were introduced to us telephonically by third parties.

It is relevant to note here that it is our policy, when dealing with individuals using false names or pseudonyms on air and in published reports, is contingent on two-(2) conditions. The first is that they have legitimate reasons for doing so (e.g. whistleblower status), we are informed that the name is a pseudonym, and most importantly, we know their true identity. In the case of Kirk McLeod, we failed to exercise due diligence.

We never met either Kirk McLeod, a/k/a Michael Erevna or Marinka Peschmann in person, although had numerous telephone conversations with both. Initially and throughout our relationship with Erevna/McLeod, he sought airtime on The Hagmann and Hagmann Report, and link status on SteveQuayle.com to elevate his visibility on the internet. To that end, Erevna/McLeod appeared twice on The Hagmann & Hagmann Report, initially on 13 October 2013 with Steve Quayle.

Concurrent with his initial appearance, Erevna/McLeod described himself as a man of little means and few assets, and was in dire need of financial assistance. Accordingly, during his appearance, we asked our listeners to pray for Erevna/McLeod, and for those of means with the desire to advance his research, contribute and support “Michael Erevna” as verified in this unedited excerpted audio clip from October 8, 2013:

To assist Michael Erevna personally as his situation was described as “extremely dire,” Steve Quayle and another generous professional colleague gifted the sum of $5,000.00 ($2,500.00/each) to McLeod from their personal funds without any desire, request or expectation of reciprocation or repayment.

Subsequent to Erevna/McLeod’s initial appearance, we began to become uneasy with the behavior of Erevna/McLeod, his elusiveness in answering certain questions that included, but was not limited to his professional connections. Accordingly, we initiated a due diligence investigation and found the following.

Michael Erevna does not legally exist, and was actually determined to be Kirk McLeod, the Executive Director of Spark Webber, an IT company based in Mount Kisco, New York. It was further determined that McLeod, individually and through his company, provided work to such government entities as the

Kirk started his information technology career building document imaging client/server builds. Including testing the very first version of Microsoft Access. He matured into a lead developer and then a Chief Architect for companies like: Boeing, Lockheed Martin, The Pentagon, UBS, Credit Suisse, Bunge, Nextel, Verizon, and Royal Bank of Scotland. He currently specializes in Web 2.0 builds and the collection of digital content.

Pentagon, Lockheed Martin, Boeing, etc. In sum and substance, the very person who was speaking about deception within the government, among other issues, was found to have deep connections to the computer systems at the Pentagon and non-governmental entities that provide direct support of the military-industrial complex.

A current resident of Mount Kisco, Westchester County, New York, McLeod is using a company, unregistered in the state of New York by the New York State Department of State by the acronym ATSI to collect monetary contributions for his “research.” This is separate from his position as Executive Director of Spark Webber.

On November 11, 2012, Kirk McLeod filed a federal lawsuit in the United States District Court of Connecticut for racial discrimination. The initial filing can be accessed HERE. The suit was filed against his employer, which is an indirect subsidiary of the Royal Bank of Scotland Group.

A summary filing of specific answers to the complaint is updated HERE.

It is relevant to note that although the suit remains open, McLeod's personal attorney ceased to represent him, filing injunctive relief with the court on October 15, 2013 (48 hours after his appearance on The Hagmann & Hagmann Report), citing irreconcilable differences in their working relationship.

While we post, publish and speak using our own true names, operating not under the cloak of anonymity, but complete transparency, it is reasonable to ask why it is necessary for an alleged Christian truth seeker to hide behind a fictitious identity if he is not an active whistle blower or has anything to hide. Any reasonable person would consider this omission alone a serious violation of trust.

As truth became ever more elusive to us, we opted not to provide any more airtime or coverage of Kirk McLeod (Michael Erevna), or anyone else directly or indirectly involved in this issue. For reasons we can only speculate, McLeod became intent on making nuisance type allegations on the Internet, which we ignored.

It was during this period, however, that Marinka Peschmann became involved with Kirk McLeod under his false identity, Michael Erevna, and initiated an increasingly insipid series of slanderous, libelous and malicious attacks against us that are completely untruthful, deliberately misrepresented, or contextually inaccurate. With regard to Marinka Peschmann, a columnist terminated from a Canadian website and other political sites, she was an invited guest on The Hagmann & Hagmann Report on December 21, 2012 to discuss, in part, her book on the death of White House Counsel Vince Foster. Her premise contained in her book proved to be unpopular.

During several private subsequent telephone conversations with Doug Hagmann between December 23, 2012 and June 5, 2013, Peschmann complained of poor book sales and lack of promotion by The Hagmann & Hagmann Report.

Following an incident in 2013 when an unusual telephone ring back and caller ID on the office telephone of Doug Hagmann suggested some type of electronic surveillance was being conducted, Marinka Peschmann offered to investigate and file FOIA inquiries with the appropriate federal agencies. In fact, she was persistent. In retrospect, this persistence should have been an indication something was amiss. Pursuant to her request, however, Hagmann provided a sworn affidavit to Peshcman and cooperated fully with her investigation.

Her allegations of non-receipt are patently false as the sworn documents were submitted and remain on file. This should be without question, as her self-stated journalistic prowess would never allow her to file FOIA requests without first having a fully sworn affidavit of facts in hand. One should thoughtfully consider this fact alone, as her actions, when viewed through her own statements, would make her either inconceivably incompetent or deliberately untruthful, or perhaps both.

During this time, Hagmann was informed by a reliable editor of an international news website that Peschmann was angry that he would not promote her book about Vince Foster due to a disagreement with her conclusions outlined in her book. Ms. Peschmann immediately became extremely agitated and told this editor and others that she was going to "take [him] down," and "do everything possible to ruin [him]" as a result.

Upon learning of these comments and feeling that the relationship of trust was questionable, at best, Hagmann requested that Peschmann immediately cease and desist any representation in his name in this or any other matters. By this time, Peschmann furnished the NSA FOIA reply to Hagmann, who erroneously referred to the NSA FOIA number as a "file number." It was upon learning that Hagmann had no desire to be represented by Peschmann when she began her rabid attacks to malign his reputation, hanging her hat on this innocuous error. As an aside and contrary to the claims of Peschmann, Hagmann never threatened to sue Peschmann, although did inform her of the desire to seek legal counsel on matters related to the core matter. Given the curious obsession of Peschmann with Hagmann, one would think she would produce authenticated proof of her accusation. She has not, as none exists.

Straining to maintain relevance and angry over being dropped from representing Hagmann in the press, Peschmann spoke telephonically to a few of our colleagues, stating her intentions to "ruin Hagmann and Quayle" by publishing a report claiming that the information contained in the sworn affidavit was a lie and we were profiting from fear. This resonated with former guest Michael Erevna (Kirk McLeod) and together, they began their public campaign of slander and libel in the fall of 2014.

Despite being a self-proclaimed journalist who claims to always speak and write the truth, it is evident that Peschmann was either a willing participant in propagating the false name of Michael Erevna on her website, or failed to conduct the necessary due diligence pertaining to his fictitious identity, even after having reason to do so. One should thoughtfully consider this fact as well, as her intentional propagation of this fictitious identity, would again make her either inconceivably incompetent or deliberately untruthful, or perhaps both.

Yet another issue Peschmann has raised as being untruthful is the allegation that the former website of Douglas J. Hagmann was never the target of termination by its host server, GoDaddy. According to Peschmann, whose journalistic abilities and motives should be much clearer by now, the fate of HomelandSecurityUS.com rested on Hagmann's ability to pay $50.00. Investigation would have found the publication of this email from GoDaddy, sent on June 22, 2012:
